Bayous Ring With Gay Song In Big Palace Musical

By Jay Carmody

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer never looks more open-hearted than when it puts on one of those large, lush, Technicolor musicals. These are like old-fashioned costume balls to which every one is invited to pay his gay respects to the outstanding members of the studio's younger set.

Precisely in the big tradition of these things is "Toast of New Orleans," which opened today at the Palace. In it a whole of a cast headed by Kathryn Grayson, Mario Lanza, David Niven and J. Carroll Naish romp so high-heeledly through song and dance and romance that there is virtually nothing to do but go along with them.

This is a Joseph Pasternak production and as every one should know by this time, it is the spirit and not the letter that counts in such cases. Taken literally, there is not really much to "The Toast of New Orleans." It is that age-old story of a pretty young opera star who meets a talented young fisherman and the steps that lead up to their living happily ever-afterward.

The package itself is so vivid that it is ungrateful to question what is inside.

Moreover, if Miss Grayson is not the greatest feminine voice any one ever heard, she has certain other superiorities over her operatic betters. If she cannot give a convincing imitation of a prima donna, she does offer a lively one and Metro has taken the sensible precaution of backing her up with sound actors in Niven, Naish, and a number of the others.

With so much sugar-coating, why worry about the absence of the pill?

Old, pre-Huey Long Louisiana is a natural as the setting of such a production as that at the Palace. There is an enticing foreign flavor in the area. There is something richly aristocratic about the cafes and other centers of culture in New Orleans itself and the adjacent bayous teem with folkness. The mingling of these two classes on festival days leads both to throw back their happy heads and sing and to burst just as frequently into frenzied intervals of dancing.

Where, indeed, could a more joyous or democratic background be found for bringing together so polished an aristocrat of the arts as Miss Grayson and such a buoyant boy of the bayous as Lanza. He comes, quite naturally, as a shock to her when he joins his wonderful, untrained voice with hers in song and seizes her in his strong fisherman's arms and swings her into a dance called the Tina Lina.

It is at this moment their common fate is sealed and it becomes apparent that the boy is going to become as great, if not greater, as an opera star. He will have to polish both his voice and his boisterous peasant manners, of course, but it is he, instead of Niven, who will marry Miss Grayson before it is over.

Norman Taurog, who directed "Toast of New Orleans," knows what a tired little fable he is dealing with. No one could be happier than he, when the opportunity arises, as it always does.

Keith's 'Outrage' Is Honest

By Harry MacArthur

The people in "Outrage" are great ones for pouring cups of coffee which they quickly abandon after one sip. They are as hard on the nerves as those people in the movies who light cigarettes and never smoke them and mix highballs and never drink them. Aside from this minor irritant there is nothing to complain seriously about in the new picture at Keith's.

Ida Lupino, who directed "Outrage" for Producer Collier Young, has a great liking for the frank, blunt look at subjects which Hollywood has hitherto ignored. In the new picture she turns her attention and yours on the tragic plight of a rape victim and she does it forcefully enough that you are not likely to have a more kindly attitude toward those who commit sex crimes or toward loose laws which don't stop them.

The script, a collaboration between the producer and director and Malvin Wald, does have a contrived look at times. The attack victim, for instance, is allowed by what seems to be a fairly large business firm to work late at night alone and unprotected. Then, before the deed is done, she flees for blocks through a business area which never would be that deserted at that hour.

Still, Director Lupino gets a great deal of terror and suspense into the sequence of violence and after it is over a young newcomer named Mala Powers manages a moving portrait of shock and horror. An actress of Miss Lupino's caliber apparently can, as a director, teach a young girl a lot about the art of acting. At any rate Miss Powers will get to your emotions as she flees in shame and mortification from half-imagined stares, ultimately to have a young preacher start the cure of her shock-battered mind.

Tod Andrews plays this man who turns the assault victim from terror back to normal life and does a thoroughly agreeable job. The others in the cast ably assist Director Lupino in getting the authentic touch she has sought and largely achieved, as before, in the use of real places instead of movie sets. "Outrage" isn't a great picture, but there is nothing phony about it. Miss Lupino, of course, has a tendency to think of a movie camera as a soap box now and then, but it seldom hurts to pay attention to her.

The Keith's program also features a timely short subject, "You Can Beat the A-Bomb," which should come as good news to you.
